Noise in Hospitals

Hospitals are rarely quiet environments even at night. Alarms, conversations, equipment, and corridor activity can interrupt patients' sleep. Some sound is necessary because alarms warn staff about urgent problems. In practical terms, hospitals try to reduce avoidable noise without removing important alarms. However, designers are therefore testing quieter equipment, improved room layouts, and alarm systems that direct messages to the appropriate staff member. This limitation is important because a completely silent hospital would not necessarily be safer. For that reason, the goal is not complete silence but reducing unnecessary noise while preserving safety.

9. What is the main purpose of the passage?

- A. compare two unrelated technologies without reaching a conclusion
- B. argue that noise in hospitals should be avoided in every situation
- C. describe only the historical origins of noise in hospitals
- D. Explain why hospital noise is a problem and how it can be reduced

10. According to the passage, which statement is true?
